

Become listed in the IT Donut Support Directory

The IT Donut is one of 5 Donut sites, which provide free advice and resources to SMEs. The IT Donut has received almost 50,000 visitors since it was set up last year. The IT Donut Support Directory lets SMEs locate an IT support company in their region. The directory receives over 1000 unique visitors per month, and is the number one localised directory for the SME market.

IT Support Directory

Whether you're looking for a completely new IT system, or just need some basic IT support, you can browse a range of local and national IT suppliers to find one that's right for you. Click on the map below or on the table to the right to find IT suppliers in your region.

Getting your IT support company listed here

Why graduates should look to tech start-ups

Why graduates should look to tech start-ups

November 17, 2011 by PostDesk

Sam England of PostDesk recently caught up with Songkick founder Pete Smith to ask him about start-ups recruiting new graduates:

I'm co-founder of east London-based startup Songkick, the company behind Silicon Milkroundabout, which brings together over 100 UK start-ups offering more than 500 tech jobs. We held our first event back in May and our second in October.

The idea came about over a pint with Ian, one of my co-founders. We were discussing a common problem. When recruiting graduates, many start-ups, say, looking for a graduate to fill a software developer post, struggle to compete against large employers, such as the big banks.

It's good for graduates to think smaller

Silicon Milkroundabout encourages graduates to think about working for start-ups rather than a bank or other large corporate. I'm not totally against working for a large bank or corporate, of course. For some, it can be the right decision.
